

SALES DATA ANALYSIS REPORT

Executive Insights & Strategic Recommendations

This report analyzes sales performance across products, channels, regions, and partners. Key findings show that Men's Street Footwear is the top-performing product category, with strong contributions from specific regions and channels. The recommendations focus on scaling high-performing areas while optimizing weaker segments to drive overall growth.

1. Product Strategy

Men's Street Footwear is the absolute powerhouse, generating over $208 million in sales and contributing the most compared to the bottom line (over $82M in profit). Interestingly, Women's Apparel is also a massive performer, outranking all other categories except Men's Street Footwear.

Recommendation: Prioritize marketing budgets for the "Street" categories. Since these products are already resonating strongly with customers, consider expanding the streetwear line or introducing exclusive limited-edition drops to keep the momentum going.

What to work on:

- ❖ Focus on Men's Street Footwear as the primary revenue driver.
- ❖ Increase inventory and visibility.
- ❖ Introduce bundle offers and cross-selling strategies.
- ❖ Analyze pricing and customer preferences.

2. Channel Optimization

In-store sales are currently leading the pack at $356M, the Outlet and Online channels are not far behind. This suggests a healthy mix of customers who value the "touch-and-feel" experience of a physical store as well as those looking for convenience and value.

Recommendation: Online presence should not be neglected. While In-store is king, the combined strength of Outlet and Online sales (nearly $543M) shows that the customers are price-conscious and digitally savvy. Enhancing the online shopping experience or offering "web-to-store" exclusives could help capture more of that digital-first audience.

What to work on:

- ❖ Invest more in high-performing channels.
- ❖ Improve low-performing channels with promotions.
- ❖ Enhance customer experience across all channels.

- ❖ Continuously monitor channel performance.

3. Regional Focus

The West region is significantly outperforming the others, bringing in nearly $270M in revenue. Within the West, California is the clear anchor, followed by Washington and Hawaii.

Recommendation: California is the most critical market. Largest regional marketing campaigns and inventory allocations should be focused on California. However, the Northeast and Southeast are also showing strong performance, these areas should not be neglected and good marketing campaigns should be introduced.

What to work on:

- ❖ Prioritize high-performing regions.
- ❖ Expand distribution in strong markets.
- ❖ Apply localized marketing strategies.
- ❖ Test improvements in weaker regions and introduced good marketing campaigns.

4. Demand Forecasting

Looking at the monthly trends for 2021, there are two distinct peaks in demand: one in July (summer peak) and another massive spike in December (holiday peak). Preparation should be made for Holiday & Summer Surges.

Recommendation: Ensure that your supply chain and inventory levels are ramped up at least 2–3 months before these peaks (by April for summer and by September for the holidays). The "slowest" period seems to be in the early spring (March), which would be the ideal time for clearing out old inventory or conducting major system maintenance.

What to work on:

- ❖ Use historical sales trends for forecasting.
- ❖ Prepare for peak demand periods.
- ❖ Reduce inventory during slow periods.
- ❖ Improve stock planning to avoid shortages.

5. Retailer & Partner Management

West Gear and Foot Locker are the primary drivers, together accounting for over $460M in sales. While these two are doing the heavy lifting, partners like Amazon and Walmart are smaller contributors by comparison.

Recommendation: Focus on building deeper, strategic relationships with West Gear and Foot Locker—perhaps through co-branded marketing or exclusive product lines.

At the same time, there might be an opportunity to grow "Direct-to-Consumer" presence or push for more volume through Amazon to improve margins, as you won't be as reliant on high-volume wholesale discounts.

What to work on:

- ❖ Strengthen top-performing partnerships.
- ❖ Provide incentives, exclusive deals, and better supply terms.
- ❖ Monitor partner performance regularly.
- ❖ Support or replace underperforming partners.

Conclusion

The data tells a pretty clear story, some parts of the business are doing really well, and those are the areas worth leaning into. Men's Street Footwear is clearly the star of the show, and it's backed up nicely by strong in-store sales and solid performance in the West region, especially California.

But it's not just about what's already working. There's a real opportunity to grow by improving online and outlet channels, reaching more customers in other regions, and planning better for those busy times of the year like summer and the holidays. Small improvements in these areas can make a big difference overall.

The key going forward is balance to keep pushing the high-performing areas while also fixing the weaker ones. With the right focus on customers, smarter planning, and stronger partnerships, the business is in a great position to keep growing and stay competitive.
